

Task A: Choose the appropriate option to make your communication effective. Also, identify which C or Cs of communication does your option include.

1. When faced with a complex topic, I should:

- A. Break it down into understandable chunks.
- B. Dive deep without considering if the audience follows.

- C. Use analogies or examples to clarify.
- D. Skip over details, assuming they're not important.

2. When faced with a disagreement or conflict, I should:

- A. Address it directly and respectfully.
- B. Avoid confrontation, even if it means not resolving the issue.

- C. Seek a mutual understanding and compromise.
- D. Stick to my viewpoint without considering alternatives.

3. When I need to apologize or admit a mistake, I should:

- A. Do so clearly and take responsibility for my actions.
- B. Reluctantly admit fault and quickly change the subject.

- C. Blame external factors or others.
- D. Avoid the topic and hope it goes unnoticed.

4. When planning a meeting or event, I should:

- A. Provide clear, concise, and complete information upfront.
- B. Send out vague details, expecting attendees to figure it out.

- C. Overload the invitation with too much information.
- D. Send multiple follow-up messages to correct initially incomplete information.

5. When involved in a group project, I should:

- A. Keep everyone updated and share information promptly.
- B. Wait for others to ask for updates.

- C. Share information only with certain team members.
- D. Overwhelm the team with too much unnecessary information.

6. When receiving instructions, I should:

- A. Clarify any doubts to ensure I've understood everything correctly.
- B. Assume I understand and avoid asking questions.

- C. Follow them as I think they were intended, without double-checking.
- D. Ignore parts that seem unclear or unnecessary.

7. My communication style should be:

- A. Respectful and considerate.
- B. Often curt or dismissive.

- C. Tailored to my audience's needs.
- D. One-size-fits-all, regardless of the recipient.

8. When communicating about a project or task, I should:

- A. Set clear expectations and deadlines.
- B. Assume everyone knows their role without clarification.

- C. Provide all necessary resources and information.
- D. Wait for others to ask questions instead of proactively providing details.

9. When discussing a sensitive issue, I should:

- A. Approach the topic with empathy and understanding.
- B. Avoid the topic to prevent discomfort.

- C. Address it bluntly, without considering the other person's feelings.
- D. Let emotions drive the conversation, often leading to conflict.

10. In written communication, I should:

- A. Proofread for clarity, consistency, and correctness.
- B. Send messages without reviewing them.

- C. Use specific examples to support my points.
- D. Write lengthy messages without clear structure.

11. When I'm unsure about a message I've received, I should:

- A. Seek clarification immediately.
- B. Make assumptions based on what I think it means.

- C. Discuss it with colleagues before responding.
- D. Ignore it, hoping it will resolve itself.

12. When writing an email or report, I should:

- A. Use bullet points or headings for clarity.
- B. Write long paragraphs without breaks.
- C. Ensure all relevant information is included.

- D. Often leave out key details, assuming the reader knows them.

13. When trying to persuade or sell an idea, I should:

- A. Use facts, logical arguments, and a clear value proposition.
- B. Rely on aggressive tactics and pressure.

- C. Make broad statements without backing them up.
- D. Speak at length without focusing on the listener's interests.

14. When presenting data or facts, I should:

- A. Use concrete examples and figures.
- B. Speak in abstract terms.

- C. Rely on visuals like charts or graphs.
- D. Make assumptions without verifying.
